Dear Mr. Jagr,

While we find it noble that you want to keep a promise to your teammate Nick Bjugstad, the promise to buy pet monkeys is one that should be forgotten!

Bjugstad's concerns about the legality of such a pet, how to care for him or her when you're traveling for games are legitimate. Do you remember what happened to Justin Bieber and his pet monkey? It wasn't good.

As experts in the field of primate care, we would like to reiterate that this choice will prove to be dangerous to both you and these potential pets, as well as irresponsible when it comes to your public following. Supporting the exotic pet trade is a game misconduct! It may even be illegal. Increasingly, locales are prohibiting the purchase and private ownership of primates, for a good reasons.

The North American Primate Sanctuary Alliance (NAPSA) is a coalition of eight of the leading primate sanctuaries on the continent. In our sanctuaries, we care for over 640 primates, many of whom were formerly owned as pets. We are contacted daily by people who purchased a pet monkey or ape and then lived to regret it. Our sanctuaries even have waiting lists of poorly considered pets whose owners can no longer care for them. There are always more than we have room for! You don't want to contribute to this problem, do you? Attached is NAPSA's Position Statement on the private ownership of primates so you may learn more about why keeping a primate as a pet is so harmful.

Buying a pet monkey is a chirp in our ears. The toy orangutan you gifted Bjustad is great. During this holiday, please don't play Santa when it comes to pet monkeys. Have his elves make another toy for you instead!

Sincerely,

Erika Fleury

Unlike dogs and cats, apes and monkeys are not domesticated animals. Non-human primates are extremely social animals whose normal development requires the company of others of their own kind. Ideally, primates should live in the wild. Their natural habitats include species-typical social groups that allow them to learn from their families and have a rich emotional life. In reality, however, there is an active industry that breeds primates to sell as pets in human homes.

As infants, primates in the pet trade are removed from their mothers years before they would naturally separate, which causes psychological suffering that manifests throughout their entire life. Teeth are often removed for ease of handling, which can limit the foods they can eat. Qualified veterinary care for pet primates can be difficult, if not impossible, to find.

Primates are inquisitive animals whose proper care requires daily mental stimulation and extensive physical activity, which is often impossible for the average household to provide. Primates kept in human homes are rarely, if ever, monitored by animal welfare officials, which means they are often kept in unsuitable living conditions resulting in neglect, mistreatment, and myriad psychological and physical ailments that can lead to death. There are a range of zoonotic diseases that are transmitted by primates and can be harmful, even fatal, to humans.

Once primates reach adolescence, which can be just a few years into a 40+ year lifespan, they inevitably become too unmanageable to handle. Primates can and will bite. They have strong jaws and sharp teeth, and bites can result in significant and potentially fatal injuries to humans. Realizing that living with an adult primate is not sustainable, owners often seek to surrender their pets or are forced to surrender them due to a threat to public safety.

Many primates that were privately owned end up living in roadside zoos, recycled as breeders to produce the next generation of ill-fated pets, or in other abusive situations. In the best cases, former pets may end up in a NAPSA member sanctuary, where they live their remaining years in an enriched environment more typical to their species. Even in sanctuary, former pets often struggle with learning how to socialize with other primates and many exhibit abnormal behaviors for the rest of their lives.

The private ownership of primates is never in the best interest of the animal or the owner.
